Although saving money on good used equipment is good for most of your setup, the tank is a major exception. Sometimes the dry rock you find in your LFS Local Fish Store comes from a retiring hobbyist that allowed their rock to die off while breaking down a tank. Yet, having said that, the good news is that this can be now easily replicated in your home aquariums. When I began in the hobby all of those years ago, live rock was king. Now is the time to find any problems and redo anything as necessary. Are you responsible? Good to see a new article from you. I Made It!
