We no longer live in a broadcast era, where we passively receive stories en masse. After attending Storytelling for Leaders participants are always full of inspiration and motivation to start using their new skills, but then they inevitably return to their offices and continue doing their jobs the exact same way as before attending the workshop. The stories U. I've helped clients craft stories in a storyboard form much like a graphic novel. Equipped with an innate drive to tell stories, and the most rudimentary tools for doing so, the youngest storyteller looks to the adult to evoke the past so that the child can contemplate, contribute, go over, and ultimately internalize a narrative rendering of his experience.

Changing behavior stake time and practice. The teller imagines the landscape takes a turn spontaneously reciting an improvised poem after someone has "thrown" them a first line. This work can make the possible feel more probable, bring new perspectives that challenge the goals and mindsets of a system, and enable the transformation of rules and processes.
