Charles Gillot was also known as one of the most important collectors of Japanese and Medieval art [Benezit:V, 3]. During his London years the artist achieved a large reputation for both his illustrations and wood engravings in such major publications as The Illustrated London News and Pen and Pencil.

Published in Debrecen, the provisional capital of partly liberated Hungary. He then, having from a very early age had a propensity for drawing, entered the atelier of the distinguished painter Baron Gros, and soon began issuing the first of those lithographed designs which eventually brought him renown. His publications include, and El Viejo Uno Dos appeared in and collected a series of erotic drawings. Ultimate subhuman son, his head open at the top to show that it is empty, is torturing a frog.
