Past generations of women have suffered in silence due to the lack of importance the police and criminology have afforded women's victimisation. The disqualification of women from the criminological field was evident in criminological texts as it was assumed the man could speak for . ViewPreview. It is aimed at students, perhaps more so than academics, and would therefore be a thoughtful addition to any core undergraduate or postgraduate course. Women were therefore protected: their criminal activity was less likely to be detected, reported, prosecuted, or sentenced harshly.
